In the bigger scheme of things – work, life, family – spider veins may seem like a small thing. But in reality, many women find them deeply embarrassing and go to great lengths to hide their legs.

It often starts with changing to a more concealing wardrobe, but many women also then start to change their lifestyles, avoiding social situations with family and friends just to stay out of sight. After all, who wants to be the only one at a barbecue wearing a long skirt when everyone else is in shorts?

If you’ve given up things you used to enjoy like walks on the beach, riding a bike, playing rounds of golf, or reading a book by the pool, spider veins have affected your quality of life. That can change. Spider veins affect women of all shapes and sizes, but a simple treatment – sclerotherapy – can help you start enjoying life again.

WE CAN HELP
Spider veins are a common problem affecting millions of Americans, but they can be treated quickly and easily. The dedicated specialists in each of our Center for Vein Restoration locations are happy to explain how to quickly and easily treat your spider veins – helping you get back to looking better, feeling better and living better.
WHAT ARE SPIDER VEINS?
They are tangled groups of tiny blood vessels just under the skin’s surface that resemble spider webs or tree branches. Typically, they are red, blue or purple and are clearly visible on the thighs, lower legs and face. Spider veins can sometimes cover large areas of skin, but they are primarily an appearance issue. Occasionally, they also may cause itching, burning or even pain, but usually they cause no symptoms at all.

Spider Veins: Before and After
Spider vein treatment is quick and easy, meaning you’ll be able to show off your legs again in no time.
WHAT CAUSES SPIDER VEINS?
Like varicose veins, spider veins are caused by a common medical condition called venous insufficiency. Normally, your veins carry blood from body tissues back to the heart and lungs to be replenished with oxygen and then re-circulated. To help the blood from your legs flow upward, against gravity, each vein is equipped with tiny, one-way valves. With each pump of the heart, the blood pushes up more and more through this series of valves. When these valves fail or leak, blood collects or pools, causing the veins to exhibit their characteristic “spider web” appearance.

WHO GETS SPIDER VEINS?
More than 30 million Americans suffer from venous insufficiency, the cause of spider veins. Contributing factors include heredity, gender, age, weight, pregnancy and childbirth, a history of DVT, and standing or sitting for long periods of time. Additional factors include smoking, exposure to heat (hot tubs, baths, saunas), and tight clothing.

HOW ARE THEY TREATED?
Spider veins are treated with a safe and quick procedure called visual sclerotherapy (conducted “visually” by a nurse or doctor without the need for imaging equipment such as the ultrasound used in varicose vein treatment). A chemical called a sclerosant is injected into the veins, blocking them and prompting the body to “re-route” the blood to other, healthier veins. The treated veins are eventually reabsorbed into the body. Unlike treatments for varicose veins, this appearance-related treatment is not normally covered by insurance.
